

What Educators Need to Know About Section 504

Presented By: Jennifer R. Fain

Partner: Atkinson, Andelson, Loya, Ruud & Romo

Jennifer Fain is the partner in charge of the Marin office of Atkinson, Andelson, Loya, Ruud & Romo. She represents educational agencies in the areas of special education and anti-discrimination. Ms. Fain has represented school agencies at every stage of the litigation process, including mediation sessions, administrative hearings, and federal court proceedings. Ms. Fain also works with clients proactively to develop practices to prevent costly disputes, including reviewing current policies and procedures regarding systemic issues and legal compliance. To further help clients avoid litigation, she offers in-service training for school personnel on a variety of issues relating to special education and disability law. She also has spoken about special education legal issues at both state and national levels. Prior to joining Atkinson, Andelson, Loya, Ruud & Romo, Ms. Fain was a partner at The Weatherly Law Firm, where, for eleven years, she represented educational agencies across the country in all facets of special education and anti-discrimination law.

Workshop Description:

This presentation will provide attendees with a review of Section 504's requirements, including eligibility determinations, equal access issues, and tips to ensure Section 504 compliance. During the workshop, we will explore case studies, recent trends, and hot topics to be aware of given the increasing demands and requests for equal access and accommodations and supports under Section 504. This presentation will offer attendees an overview of this complicated law, as well as provide guidance and useful tips on what steps to take when faced with questions and issues covered under section 504.
